
CONTRIBUTORS

Salma Elkadi Abugideiri is a licensed professional counselor, with a certification in marriage and family therapy. She has worked extensively with refugees, immigrants, and Muslim and Middle Eastern families. She is also Co-Director of the Peaceful Families Project, a Muslim organization dedicated to preventing domestic violence through education and training. She is a member of the Leadership Team of the FaithTrust Institute and serves on the Editorial Board of the Journal of Religion and Abuse.

Barbara Ball, Program Evaluation Specialist, received her Ph.D. in art education and art therapy from New York University. She has more than 15 years of clinical experience working with children and teens from violent homes and has integrated creative, arts-based components into school-based counseling and dating violence prevention programming. At SafePlace, she has had primary responsibility for developing the Expect Respect Program Manual that addresses support groups for at-risk youths, teen leadership groups, and school-wide prevention strategies. She also coordinates the program evaluation in conjunction with the Centers of Disease Control and Prevention, Research Triangle Institute, International, Georgia State University, and the University of Miami in Ohio. She has presented on the Expect Respect program and evaluation at numerous conferences.

Shreya Bhandari received her Ph.D. in social work from the University of Missouri. Her dissertation focused on coping strategies of low-income, rural, pregnant women facing intimate partner violence. She has worked as a crisis counselor for women facing domestic violence at Dilaasa, a hospital-based crisis center, in Mumbai, India. She is currently a post-doctorate fellow with the School of Nursing at the University of Missouri working on the Domestic Violence Enhanced Home Visitation (DOVE) Program. DOVE is testing a research-based intervention with public health nurses/home visitors for pregnant women experiencing IPV.

Rupaleem Bhuyan is an assistant professor at the University of Toronto, Faculty of Social Work. She is a second-generation immigrant of Assamese/Indian heritage who was born and raised in the United States and has lived and worked in France, Thailand, and now Canada. She has spent nearly two decades in the anti-violence movement as a peer educator, community organizer, and advocate. During the past six years, Dr. Bhuyan has collaborated with community-based domestic violence agencies to explore social and political factors that impact advocacy with immigrant, refugee, and indigenous women. Her current research explores how political pressure to deny immigrants access to public benefits influences their response to domestic violence and related health sequelae.

Bonnie Brandl, MSW, is the director of the National Clearinghouse on Abuse in Later Life (NCALL), a project of the Wisconsin Coalition Against Domestic Violence (WCADV). Brandl has worked with battered women for more than 24 years. She co-authored a book titled Elder Abuse Detection and Intervention: A Collaborative Approach. Her numerous published articles and manuals on abuse in later life have been distributed throughout the country. For more than a decade, she has presented at national, regional, statewide, and local conferences on domestic violence and elder abuse. Brandl has an MSW degree from the University of Wisconsin, Madison.

Brenda Bussey, MSW (Mohawk), received her bachelor of arts degree in American Indian studies and English from the University of Minnesota in Duluth, MN. She received her master of social work degree from the University of Minnesota, Duluth, in 2004. Since earning her master's degree, Brenda has worked primarily in the domestic violence/sexual assault field. She worked for Mending the Sacred Hoop Technical Assistance Project in Duluth as a resource coordinator for four years; there her work focused primarily on improving the response to Native women who have been battered or sexually assaulted, by working with tribes who were implementing tribally based domestic violence and sexual assault programs. Brenda is now at the American Indian Community Housing Organization in Duluth as the coordinator for Dabino'igan Shelter, a shelter for Native women who have been battered.

Bonnie E. Carlson, Ph.D., CSW, is currently Professor and Associate Director, School of Social Work, Arizona State University. After completing a Ph.D. at the University of Michigan in Social Work and Psychology, she served on the faculty at the University at Albany, State University of New York, from 1979 to 2007. During that time, she served in many faculty leadership roles, including Director of the Undergraduate Program (1980–84) and Associate Dean (1987–88). Her research has focused on intimate partner violence and other forms of trauma by intimates as well as public attitudes toward domestic violence. Her most recent research has addressed trauma histories and parenting strain in drug-abusing mothers. She has been the recipient of several research grants on family violence and is the author of numerous articles and book chapters. She is also on the editorial board of two professional journals, the Journal of Interpersonal Violence and Trauma, Violence, and Abuse. She has also conducted research on trauma and parenting strain in women attempting to recover from drug abuse and a group intervention on mindfulness meditation for men and women recovering from drug and alcohol abuse.

Lorraine A. Chase, DSW, has spent the last 29 years working with victims, children, and perpetrators of domestic violence. She was the director of a comprehensive, nongovernmental domestic violence program that included a shelter, hotline, and legal services; the latter provided attorneys and advocates in each courthouse, counseling services, and community outreach and education. She has done individual, group, couples, and family therapy. She has testified before Congress twice on the issue of domestic violence. Her doctoral dissertation researched gender role conflict and male domestic violence abusers. She was one of four Americans chosen to tour Pakistan, Nepal, and Bangladesh to work with advocates trying to establish domestic violence services in those countries. She was the president of the Maryland Network Against Domestic Violence (MNADV), and she remains a member after 20 of service to them. She was MNADV's representative to the National Coalition Against Domestic Violence, where she served as chair of the Women of Color Task Force. She was a volunteer for the Anne Arundel County Sexual Assault Program. She also served on boards of directors for substance abuse facility and domestic violence program, and she is currently president of the Zonta

Club of Annapolis. She is an adjunct professor at the Anne Arundel Community College. Dr. Chase received her bachelor of science degree from the State University of New York at Stony Brook; her master of social work degree from the Virginia Commonwealth University; and her doctorate degree in social work from the Catholic University of America.

Elizabeth Circo is a doctoral student at the University of Washington. Most recently a program assistant at the Annie E. Casey Foundation in Baltimore, MD, she has worked with disadvantaged populations in various positions in Washington, DC—with the Mayor's Advisory Committee on Child Abuse and Neglect; the Whitman-Walker Clinic; the Institute for Women's Policy Research; the Department of Health and Human Services Office of Minority Health; Georgetown University; the Sexual Minority Youth Assistance League; and the Little Blue House, a group home for abused, abandoned, and neglected children. Elizabeth earned her MSW degree from the Howard University School of Social Work.

Elizabeth P. Cramer, Ph.D., is a professor in the School of Social Work at Virginia Commonwealth University. Her primary practice and scholarship areas are domestic violence, lesbian and gay issues, and group work. Dr. Cramer edited a book published by Haworth Press titled Addressing Homophobia and Heterosexism on College Campuses. She has published a number of journal articles, a book chapter, and a CD-Rom on abuse of persons with disabilities. Dr. Cramer serves as a board member on the Chesterfield County Domestic Violence Task Force, and is a member of its DELTA committee (CDC-funded prevention project). She is the principal investigator for the I-CAN Accessibility Project, a grant-funded project by the Department of Criminal Justice Services Virginia Sexual and Domestic Violence Victim Fund, to increase accessibility to legal protections for abused persons with disabilities and to enhance the ability of disability service providers to work with abused consumers.

Fran S. Danis, Ph.D., ACSW, is Associate Professor and Associate Dean at the University of Texas at the Arlington School of Social Work. She has taught at the University of Missouri and the University of Texas at Austin. As a social work practitioner, she founded a domestic and sexual violence community-based program in Denton, Texas, served as the chair of the Texas Council on Family Violence, a state domestic violence coalition, and was staff associate at the National Association of Social Workers/Texas. Her experience in the domestic violence field includes direct services and administration, policy development and advocacy, training and technical assistance, research and evaluation, and teaching. She is a co-editor with Lettie Lockhart of Breaking the Silence in Social Work Education: Domestic Violence Modules for Foundation Courses published by the Council on Social Work Education (CSWE). Together they founded the CSWE Violence Against Women and Their Children annual symposium. Fran has served on the NASW Committee on Women's Issues and the CSWE Commission on the Role and Status of Women in Social Work Education. She was the principal investigator for the project "Crime Victims: A Social Work Response, Strengthening Skills to Strengthen Survivors" conducted in collaboration with NASW/Texas and funded by the U.S. Department of Justice, Office for Victims of Crime. She was the first social worker in Texas to receive the NASW Social Worker of the Year Award from two different communities. Fran earned a Ph.D. from the Mandel School of Applied Social Sciences at Case Western Reserve University and an MSW from Stony Brook University in New York. Her research interests include social work response to domestic violence, resiliency of domestic violence survivors, and adult children of battered women.

Rabbi Mark Dratch was ordained as an Orthodox Rabbi at the Rabbi Isaac Elchanan Theological Seminary of Yeshiva University and served as a pulpit rabbi for 22 years. He is Founder and CEO of JSafe: The Jewish Institute Supporting an Abuse Free Environment and is a member of the Leadership Team of FaithTrust Institute. He is an Instructor of Judaic Studies at the Isaac Breuer College of Yeshiva University, former Vice President of the Rabbinical Council of America and chair of its Taskforce on Rabbinic Improprieties, past member of the Jewish Advisory Committee of the FaithTrust Institute, and a member of the Clergy Task Force of Jewish Women International. He served on the Editorial Board of the Journal of Religion and Abuse.

Rev. Dr. Marie M. Fortune is the Founder and Senior Analyst at FaithTrust Institute since 1977. She is ordained in the United Church of Christ and is a practicing theologian and ethicist, educator, and author. She is best known for her book, Keeping the Faith: Questions and Answers for Christian Abused Women. Fortune was editor of the Journal of Religion and Abuse from 2000 to 2008. She served on the National Advisory Council to the Office on Violence Against Women in the U.S. Department of Justice (1994–2000) and the Defense Task Force on Domestic Violence for the U.S. Department of Defense (2000–2003).

Tricia B. Bent-Goodley, Ph.D., is a Professor at Howard University School of Social Work and Chair of the Community, Administration, and Policy Practice Sequence. She has numerous publications and research on the intersection of violence against women and girls with cultural competence, child welfare, health and mental health, and faith- and community-based interventions. Dr. Bent-Goodley is a Fellow with the HIV Intervention Science Training Program and a former Hartman Child and Family Scholar. Dr. Bent-Goodley serves on national boards and local planning committees providing expertise in violence against women and girls, child welfare, policy, and research. She is the editor of African American Social Workers and Social Policy and co-editor, with Dr. King E. Davis, of The Color of Social Policy and Teaching Social Policy in Social Work Education. Dr. Bent-Goodley received her Ph.D. from Columbia University and her MSW from the University of Pennsylvania. Prior to coming to Howard University, she was a director and clinician with several family violence prevention programs in Harlem and Queens County, New York.

Delores F. Johnson, MSW, ACSW, previously Director, Family Programs, Headquarters, U.S. Army, Family and Morale, Welfare and Recreation Command (FMWRC), is currently Director, Plan, Installation Management Command. Prior to becoming a civil service employee with the Army, Ms. Johnson held both clinical and social service management positions with local, state, and private agencies serving as a clinical social worker for the Texas Department of Mental Health and Mental Retardation, Executive Director for the El Paso, Texas, Battered Women's Shelter, and school social worker in Vernon Parish, LA. She began her tenure with the military in 1984 as the Family Advocacy Program Manager, Fort Bliss, Texas, and served as the Family Advocacy Program Manager and Army Community Service Director in Wiesbaden, Germany. Ms. Johnson joined the FMWRC staff in July 1990 as the Family Advocacy Program Manager and later served as the Chief, Army Community Service. She has served as a member of the American Bar Association Commission on Domestic Violence and the National Domestic Violence Hotline. Delores F. Johnson holds a BA degree from Averett College, Danville, Virginia. She received an MSW degree from the University of Maryland School of Social Work in Baltimore, Maryland, an MA degree in National Security and Strategic Studies from the Naval War College, is a graduate of the Senior Executive Fellows Program at John F. Kennedy School of Government, Harvard University, and the Department of Defense Leadership and Management Program (DLAMP). Delores F. Johnson is a member of the Academy of Certified Social Workers (ACSW) and a licensed clinical social worker. Delores F. Johnson has received the following awards: Department of the Army Meritorious Civilian Service Award, Superior Civilian Service Award, The Order of the White Plume, Who's Who in American Colleges and Universities, Who's Who of American Women, and Who's Who in Human Services. She has also published several articles in major publications.

Mimi Kim has worked for more than 20 years as an anti-violence advocate in Asian communities, including 10 years at the Asian Women's Shelter where she coordinated a nationally recognized multilingual access program. She is a steering committee member of the Asian and Pacific Islander Domestic Violence Institute, a national resource center. Mimi is also a founding member of Incite! Women of Color against Violence, where she has been working collectively with women of color nationally and internationally to create community-based solutions to violence. Mimi continues her domestic violence advocacy as the Founder and Executive Director of Creative Interventions, a resource center supporting community-based interventions to domestic violence and other forms of intimate violence based in Oakland. She is also a program consultant for Shimtuh: Korean Domestic Violence Program, an Oakland-based program which she co-founded in 2000. Mimi is currently a Ph.D. candidate at the School of Social Welfare at the University of California, Berkeley.

Shanti Kulkarni, Ph.D. LCSW, is Assistant Professor of Social Work at the University of North Carolina at Charlotte. Her primary research explores developmental and contextual factors within interpersonal violence theory and practice. She has worked in the sexual assault and domestic violence movement for more than a decade as an advocate, clinician, and researcher.

Taryn Lindhorst, Ph.D., LCSW, is an Associate Professor of Social Work at the University of Washington. Prior to receiving her doctorate in 2001, Dr. Lindhorst provided social work services for 15 years in public health settings in New Orleans, Louisiana, where she helped found the local chapter of ACT UP and worked with several other LGBT organizations. Her current research investigates the intersection between individuals and social institutions, particularly as this relates to issues of violence against women. Dr. Lindhorst's work on the effects of welfare reform for battered women has won two national awards, and she has received a Career Development award from the National Institutes of Health to study domestic violence and mental health outcomes. Her current projects include longitudinal analysis of the long-term impact of domestic violence on economic and mental health outcomes among adolescent mothers, a policy study of the experiences of battered women who are subject to legal action in the U.S. under the Hague Convention on the Civil Aspects of Child Abduction, and relationship violence among sexual minority youth.

Lettie L. Lockhart, Ph.D. LCSW, is currently a professor in the School of Social Work and the Director of the SSW Training Project at the University of Georgia. Lettie earned her Ph.D. from the School of Social Work from Florida State University, her MSW from Howard University in Washington, DC, and her BS in Social Work from Southern University in Baton Rouge, LA. She has been researching, teaching, and practicing in the area of domestic violence for more than 20 years. She has been a pioneer in the empirical investigation of violence in intimate personal relationships with a focus on cultural and environmental factors. Dr. Lockhart has researched and taught courses/content on domestic violence with particular attention on race, class, gender, and sexual orientation. She was one of the major community players in the development of the first Domestic Violence (Project SAFE) shelter and hotline in Athens, Georgia. She has served on Boards of Directors of Domestic Violence Programs and on national panels addressing domestic violence and she has been a juried reviewer for the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention in Atlanta. She has been an advocate for domestic violence curriculum integration with the Council on Social Work Education (CSWE) over the past nine years and an advocate for policy and funding initiatives at the national, state, and local levels to address this major social issue. She is co-editor, with Fran Danis, of Breaking the Silence in Social Work Education: Domestic Violence Modules for Foundation Courses published by the CSWE. Together Lockhart and Danis founded the CSWE Violence Against Women and Their Children annual symposium.

Beckie Uta Masaki is currently Co-Founder and Executive Director of the Asian Women's Shelter (AWS) in San Francisco and has served in that role since the shelter opened in 1988. She received her MSW degree from the University of California at Berkeley in 1983. In addition to her direct service and organizational development work at AWS, Beckie has provided peer-based training and technical assistance to a wide range of grassroots women's groups on local, state, national, and international levels. Beckie is an appointed representative of the California Domestic Violence Advisory Committee, one of the founding members of the Asian and Pacific Islander Institute on Domestic Violence, and currently serves on the steering committee of the National Judicial Institute on Domestic Violence. Beginning in 1983, as the first and only Asian woman in a mainstream shelter program, Beckie has continued for the past 26 years to bring the voices and experiences of marginalized groups into the center of the movement to end violence against all women.

Gita Mehrotra is currently a doctoral student in the Social Welfare Program at the University of Washington. She has been involved with domestic violence work for the past 14 years in a variety of capacities, including direct service, education/training, and program and organizational development with a focus on API and queer communities. She is a consultant with the Asian Women's Shelter, San Francisco, and is one of the lead organizers of Transforming Silence into Action, a national network of lesbian, bisexual, queer women and transgender people addressing domestic violence in queer API communities. She is also engaged with technical assistance and training with South Asian and API community-based organizations around the country. Gita's current research and teaching interests include domestic violence in South Asian and queer communities, anti-oppression/social justice education, critical theory and social work, and qualitative, community-based research.

Shawn L. Mincer, MSW, began his career 13 years ago as a prevention educator, crisis intervention staff and volunteer trainer with sexual violence and intimate partner violence (IPV) agencies in New England, and with prevention and intervention programs at the University of New Hampshire. He obtained his MSW at the University of Michigan in 2003, where he worked with the statewide Michigan Coalition Against Domestic and Sexual Violence. While there he assisted in implementing a national survey on primary prevention strategies for domestic violence, funded by the Centers for Disease Control (CDC), titled A Vision for Prevention. He also worked on a primary prevention program targeted at Latino youth in Southeast Michigan and a CDC-funded program to strengthen Community Response Teams in responding to IPV and sexual violence. Currently a doctoral student in the Social Welfare Program at the University of Washington, Shawn's research interests include investigating IPV in the community of men who have sex with men, working with lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender, and queer (LGBTQ) elders and caregiving dyads, LGBTQ youths, community organizing and social movements, and critical research methodologies.

Jacquelyn Mitchell, JD, LCISW, is a forensic social worker, attorney, and mediator. She has served on the faculty of several graduate schools and departments of social work, developing and teaching courses on social policy, diverse populations, administration, mediation, and forensic social work. Her scholarship includes empirical investigations of relationships related to non-custodial fathers, their children, and natural mothers; youth and community conflict; the impact of family formation on familial well-being; and the elderly. Her scholarship includes more than twenty juried articles and book chapters, more than 65 professional presentations, and program development activities related to the promotion of social, economic, and political justice. Her trans-disciplinary career includes positions as director of an adoptions department, a Reginald Heber Smith Fellow in legal services, a public defender, private practice of law, judicial and nonprofit administration, legislative legal counsel, and family and general mediation. She is on the editorial board of the Journal of Values and Ethics and has served as co-editor of the Journal of Forensic Social Work and as a reviewer for the Journal of Race, Gender, and Class. She holds a Juris doctorate degree from the University of Pennsylvania Law School and an MSW from Atlanta University.

Sara-Beth Plummer, Ph.D., MSW, is a Project Coordinator and Instructor for the Center on Violence against Women and Children at the Rutgers University School of Social Work. Her experience includes being both a social worker and an assistant director at Barrier Free Living, Inc., an agency that provides services to individuals with disabilities who have been abused. She has assisted in creating a curriculum for teachers and parents on the topic of abuse and children with disabilities. She has presented to multiple social service agencies, law enforcement personnel, and medical settings on the prevalence of abuse of individuals with disabilities. She was a research evaluator at the Partnership for People with Disabilities. Her research interests include domestic violence, criminal justice, and empowerment.

Blanca M. Ramos, Ph.D., LCSW, is currently Associate Professor of Social Work at the University of North Carolina at Charlotte. She has taught courses on clinical social work, diversity, immigrants, Hispanic cultures in the U.S., and research in Latino communities. Her research and publications have focused on health disparities, multiculturalism, international social work, and domestic violence centering on Latinos. She has served in various local, regional, and national boards and commissions, and has extensive experience as a practitioner and community advocate. She is past First Vice President of the National Association of Social Workers (NASW) and has served on the National Board of the Institute for the Advancement of Social Work Research, the editorial board of Social Work, and the NASW National Committee on Inquiry.

Elizabeth Randall, LICSW, Ph.D., is Associate Professor of Social Work at West Virginia University. She has 21 years of direct practice experience in the field of behavioral health, including inpatient and outpatient work with children, youths, adults, families, and groups. She is a member of Phi Kappa Phi, President of the West Virginia State Chapter of the National Association of Social Workers, and a member of the West Virginia Comprehensive Behavioral Health Advisory Board.

Selena T. Rodgers, Ph.D., LSCW-R, is an Assistant Professor of Social Work at York College, City University of New York. Prior to her fulltime appointment, she served as an Adjunct Assistant Professor for six years in the same program. She was also the Associate Vice President at Safe Horizon's Queens Criminal Justice and Community Programs; one of the nation's leading agencies in the field of victimization. Her research interests include Posttraumatic Growth (PTG) with multi-cultural and multi-ethnic communities. She was a recipient of the Adjunct Professional Staff Congress (PSC)/CUNY Research Award which supported (in part) her doctoral research on PTG among Latina immigrants living in refugee-like situations. She recently received a grant from the PSC-CUNY Research Award to examine posttraumatic growth and spiritual well-being in African-American female and male adult survivors of childhood sexual abuse. She is a former Hartman Child and Family Services Scholar. She has a published book chapter entitled, The Art of Healing: An Afrocentric helping guide for practitioners working with African-African families who experience intimate partner violence. She received her Ph.D. from Adelphi University and her master's degree in social work from Syracuse University.

Barri Rosenbluth, LCSW, is Director of SafePlace's Expect Respect Program in Austin, Texas. Expect Respect provides counseling, support groups, and educational programs for youth and adults on the issues of dating and domestic violence, sexual harassment, and bullying prevention in K–12 schools. Expect Respect has gained national recognition and was selected in 2008 as one of eleven sites to participate in Start Strong, an initiative to promote healthy teen relationships funded by the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation. Barri worked closely with the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention on the development of Choose Respect, and has co-authored several curricula including the Expect Respect Program Manual, Date Smart for the Boys and Girls Clubs of America, and Love All That and More for the FaithTrust Institute. Barri, her colleagues, and youth participating in Expect Respect have been featured on Good Morning America, ABC News Day One and World News Tonight, The Oprah Winfrey Show, Partnerships for Preventing Violence National Satellite Training, Parade magazine, Teaching Tolerance, National Public Radio, and in other local and national media.

Woochan S. Shim, Ph.D., is an assistant professor in the Department of Social Welfare at Daejeon University in South Korea. Her research interests include violence against women across the life span and culture. She taught and practiced in the domestic violence field in Korea as well as in the United States. She has been dedicated to developing culturally and spiritually sensitive and effective interventions for victims of ethnic minorities in both countries. She began working toward ending violence against women in the late 1980s and she continues to work toward the same goal locally and internationally.

Deb Spangler is currently the Aging and Disabilities Program Specialist for the National Clearinghouse on Abuse in Later Life, a project of the Wisconsin Coalition Against Domestic Violence. She has provided technical assistance, training, and consultation on abuse in later life as well as abuse of persons with disabilities both in Wisconsin and nationally, for the Department of Justice, Office on Violence Against Women Training grantees, since December 2000. Prior to that, Deb was employed for ten years at the local domestic abuse program in Madison, Wisconsin. There, in addition to providing direct client services, she developed several programs including the Abuse in Later Life Program, the Rural Outreach Program, and the Health Care Advocacy Program. Deb has produced and published 11 articles, booklets, and manuals, and has facilitated trainings in the elder abuse, disabilities, and health-care fields throughout the United States.

Leslie E. Tower, Ph.D., is an Associate Professor in the Division of Social Work and the Division of Public Administration at West Virginia University. Her research interests focus on women and, in particular, on violence against women, women and work, and feminist pedagogy. She has published articles on domestic violence in the Journal of Social Work Education, the Journal of Interpersonal Violence, and the Journal of Family Violence. Dr. Tower is also active in community education on domestic violence, for example, updating, displaying, and producing programs around the West Virginia Silent Witness Exhibit.

Deborah D. Tucker is Executive Director for the National Center on Domestic and Sexual Violence and served as Co-Chair of the U.S. Department of Defense Task Force on Domestic Violence from 2000 to 2003. Deborah has been dedicated to ending violence against women since becoming a volunteer with the first rape crisis center in Texas in 1973. She then served as Assistant Director for the Austin Rape Crisis Center (ARCC) from 1973 to 1975. She was Co-Founder and Executive Director of the Austin Center for Battered Women from 1977 until 1982. These two agencies were combined in 1997 to become the SafePlace Survival Center. In 1982 she became the first Executive Director of the Texas Council on Family Violence, a position she held until 1996. Under her leadership, the Texas Council grew to be one of the largest state coalitions in the country with a staff of more than fifty providing training and technical assistance, public education, and advocacy, and it is home to the National Domestic Violence Hotline, 1-800-799-SAFE. She was the founding Chair of the National Network to End Domestic Violence during its development and passage of the Violence Against Women Act in 1994. The National Center on Domestic and Sexual Violence provides and customizes training and consultation, influences policy, promotes collaboration, and enhances diversity with the goal of ending domestic and sexual violence. Visit their award winning Web site at <http://www.ncdsv.org>. Tucker received the National Network to End Domestic Violence's Standing in the Light of Justice Award and Marshall's Domestic Violence Peace Prize in recognition of her national leadership. She has also been honored as a Public Citizen of the Year by the National Association of Social Workers.

Ann Turner has worked as an Aging and Disabilities Specialist for the National Clearinghouse on Abuse in Later Life (NCALL), a project of the Wisconsin Coalition Against Domestic Violence (WCADV) since 2002. Ms. Turner has been a grassroots organizer for the domestic violence movement in a rural area of Northwestern Wisconsin since 1981, and she opened a domestic abuse shelter in 1986. She served as Executive Director of the program for 20 years and has extensive experience in developing agency policy and procedures, including service and outreach programs. Ms. Turner's development experience also includes writing training curriculum and presenting on numerous topics including domestic violence, domestic abuse in later life, ageism, and domestic violence in the lesbian, gay, bisexual, and transgender community. Ms. Turner received the Bonnie Brandl Outstanding Systems Advocate Award from WCADV in 1991, and in 2001 she received a blanket, a symbol of honor, from the St. Croix Tribal Community for her work with that community.

J. B. Whipple, MSW (Mi'kmaq), received her BA degree in economics from Wheaton College, Norton, MA, and her MSW degree from the University of Southern Maine, Portland, ME. She is a member of the Eskasoni Band, Mi'kmaq First Nation in Nova Scotia. Her master's research thesis explored the effect of drumming on healing from trauma in women from the tribes and bands of the Wabanaki Confederacy. JB was recently a research analyst at the Cutler Institute of Child and Family, Muskie School of Public Service, University of Southern Maine, where she had the primary responsibility for analyzing data on grants to end violence against Indian women, such as the STOP Violence Against Indian Women and the Indian Coalitions Against Sexual Assault and Domestic Violence programs, funded by the U.S. Department of Justice. In addition, she provides technical assistance to tribes on the grants which address sexual assault, domestic violence, and stalking. As a volunteer, JB works as an advocate at the Sexual Assault Services of Southern Maine (SARSSM), a local rape crisis center, staffing the hotline, responding to crisis calls, and accompanying victims to the hospital and law enforcement interviews.

Kavya Velagapudi is a graduate student and a teaching assistant in the University of Kansas, School of Social Welfare. She has worked as an advocate at a domestic violence shelter for women and children and also interned for Kansas Coalition Against Sexual and Domestic Violence during her graduate studies.