

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

THERE ARE NOT SUFFICIENT WORDS to express the enormity of my gratitude to the courageous people who choose to tell their stories of enslavement. This book is a testimony in nearly forty voices to the horrors of slavery, to the audacity of survival, and to the enormous responsibility of freedom. The people who have written or told their stories for this collection have my humblest admiration and thanks for their willingness to share their stories despite the immeasurable pain it takes to narrate slavery. Their narratives of freedom are an inspiration and an encouragement to me to continue to work toward the abolition of modern slavery.

I must also thank the organizations and activists who have contributed their time and their work to this collection as well as to the modern abolitionist cause. Thanks to Free the Slaves—especially Kevin Bales, Peggy Callahan, Ginny Baumann, Judy Hyde, Jody Sarich, and Terry Fitzpatrick—and to the Coalition to Abolish Slavery and Trafficking (CAST)—the Survivor Advisory Caucus, Vanessa Lanza, and Kay Buck. These two organizations provided contacts and interviews for substantial parts of the book. Polaris Project, Protection Project, the Albanian Association of Girls and Woman, and World Vision International provided access to narratives as well. Thanks to Laura Lederer for her help in contextualizing some of the narratives and for decades of service to this cause. My gratitude also goes to Christopher Shay and Inge Bell for being willing to share their work for this project as well as to Rod Soodalter, Bridgette Carr, and Sandy Shepherd for their help in understanding the issue and for putting me in contact with people who were crucial to the completion of this project. Thanks to WGBH Boston National Public Radio and the Phnom Penh Post for granting permission to reprint their pieces.

Thanks are due to Esther DeBrujin, Paul Lovejoy, Olabode Ibrinke, Ken Harrow, Hillary Eklund, Chris Schaberg, and Timothy Welsh for responding to drafts of the introduction. Kevin Bales is owed special thanks for supporting me and my work over the years. I have benefited greatly from the generosity of my scholar-activist colleagues at Loyola University New Orleans—Rae Taylor, Charles Corprew, Andre Perry, and Christian Bolden—as well as from conversation with my welcoming colleagues in the Department of English. Nicole Hartz, Lauren Campbell, Amelie Daigle, Jasmine Jackson, and Jessiona Bryant were my tireless and fearless research assistants; I thank them for their effort and dedication. And I must not fail to thank my first-year seminar students, who read through drafts of this collection and generously provided their feedback. My thanks also go to Jennifer Perillo and Stephen Wesley of Columbia University Press for their enthusiasm for this project and to Annie Barva for her thoughtful and sensitive editing.

My deepest gratitude goes to Shamere McKenzie, James Kofi Annan, and Minh Dang, whose own activism and friendship are a constant reminder of the importance of this work. And last, thanks to Rian Thum, for supporting me and this project, even when the stories seemed too difficult to bear.

This work was also supported by grants from Ithaca College and Loyola University New Orleans.

All editor proceeds from this book will be donated to Free the Slaves and CAST.

SURVIVORS OF SLAVERY

INTRODUCTION

THIS BOOK IS A COLLECTION OF modern-day slave narratives. It marks the reemergence of a narrative genre that many of us thought had died with the last of the survivors of legal slavery in the Americas. Slavery unfortunately did not end with its abolition in any country in the world. Instead, it went underground. It often operates under different and more obscure names, such as conscriptio, trafficking, peonage. But the basic elements of slavery—the forced labor, the lack of pay, the inability to escape—remain the same. And the drive to tell the story of slavery remains as strong among survivors today as it did during the antebellum period.

Since the turn of the twenty-first century, increasing attention has been paid to these situations of forced labor, and we are calling it by its rightful name: slavery. As concerned global citizens slowly come to realize that slavery still exists and always has existed in our midst, survivors of slavery are increasingly coming forward to report and reflect on their lived experiences of enslavement. Thus, in the past decade or so, the slave narrative has been reborn.

This book is an open condemnation of the global crime that is modern slavery. It has two explicit goals. The first is to find an audience for the courageous survivors who have chosen to testify to their experiences of enslavement and provide an impetus for activists, scholars, students, and citizens to work to eradicate these contemporary forms of bondage. The second, complimentary goal is to engage the narratives from a scholarly perspective that understands these testimonies of modern slavery as the primary documents of the emerging field of modern slavery studies and the now radically
