I would like to thank the students in my Human Behavior classes at the Columbia School of Social Work, who made me increasingly aware of the need to understand the goals and tasks of the different phases of the life cycle and reintroduced me to many of the important theorists.

I am extremely grateful to Patricia Kolb for her diligence and professionalism; it has been a pleasure to work with her. The late John Michel was a wonderful editor and an even better friend. Without his patience and sense of humor, this book never would have been completed. The library staff at the Weill Medical College of Cornell University, especially Bruce, has been extremely helpful and patient, and Josephine LeDonne, once more, helped with myriad necessary tasks.

Finally, I will always be grateful to the late Carol H. Meyer for her support and encouragement.
DEVELOPMENTAL THEORIES THROUGH THE LIFE CYCLE
