Rosemary J. Avery is Professor and Chairman of the Department of Policy Analysis and Management at Cornell University. Her research program focuses on national child welfare issues, particularly permanence for adolescents exiting foster care. She serves as evaluator on two federal grants focusing on permanence for youth living in congregate care settings.

Richard P. Barth is Professor and Dean of the School of Social Work at the University of Maryland School of Social Work. He has helped develop and evaluate innovations in child abuse prevention, foster care, school social work, adolescent parenting services, adoption, and independent living services.

Laura K. Chintapalli has served as a case manager at the Safe Children Coalition in Sarasota County, Florida, as a research assistant and associate at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill School of Social Work, and currently as a foster care licensing social worker in Chatham County, North Carolina.

Sandra Stukes Chipungu is an Associate Professor at Morgan State University Department of Social Work. She received her doctorate and two masters degrees from the University of Michigan and her undergraduate degree from Morgan State University. Her areas of research are child welfare, foster care and kinship care, African American families and children, social policies, substance abuse prevention, and program evaluation.

Hewitt B. (Rusty) Clark is the Director of the National Center on Youth Transition for Behavioral Health and is a Professor in the Department of Child and Family Studies at the Florida Mental Health Institute, University of South Florida. He has developed and researched innovative programs concerning individualized planning and interventions for children, youth, and families with emotional/behavioral difficulties and transition to employment, educational opportunities, and independent living.

Mark E. Courtney is Executive Director of Partners for Our Children, a public-private partnership housed at the University of Washington and devoted to improving child welfare services. He is also the Ballmer Chair for Child Well-Being in the School of Social Work at the University of Washington, as well as fellow and former director at Chapin Hall Center for Children.

David Crampton is an Assistant Professor of Social Work at the Mandel School of Applied Social Sciences, Case Western Reserve University in Cleveland, Ohio. His work explores the use of family meetings and other community-based child welfare practices.

Kimberly A. Crosland is a board-certified behavior analyst and Assistant Professor at the University of South Florida. She is the research director for the Behavior Analysis Services Program, a statewide initiative for foster children and families funded through the Department of Children and Families.

Gretta Cushing is a Senior Research Associate at Casey Family Services. She is currently the lead investigator of the Casey Longitudinal Study of Foster Youth Development, a study designed to examine outcomes and developmental trajectories of youth with a history of foster care as they transition to young adulthood.

Sabrina A. Davis of Planning and Learning Technologies, Inc., is responsible for multiple aspects of the National Evaluation of the Court Improvement Program. She has represented children in abuse and neglect proceedings as Laura G. Daugherty is Assistant Professor at the National Catholic School of Social Service, Catholic University of America. A licensed social worker in the District of Columbia and Maryland, she spent nearly ten years in public child welfare. Her areas of research interest include adolescents in foster care and African American children in child welfare.

Shirley A. Dobbin is an Assistant Director of the Permanency Planning for Children Department of the National Council of Juvenile and Family Court Judges. She is involved in a number of research and evaluation projects involving permanency planning at the local, state, and national levels. She has coauthored a number of technical assistance bulletins and articles about child welfare practice and systems change.

Karl Ensign, Director, Evaluation for Children, Youth, and Families, at Planning and Learning Technologies, Inc., has twenty years experience in policy development and evaluation of children and family services. He was previously employed in the Office of the Assistant Secretary for Planning and Evaluation, U.S. Department of Health and Human Services. He is currently leading the National Evaluation of the Court Improvement Program for the Children’s Bureau.

Madelyn Freundlich is a child welfare consultant at Excal Consulting Partners LLC. She formerly served as General Counsel and Director of Child Welfare Services for the Child Welfare League of America, as Executive Director for the Evan B. Donaldson Adoption Institute, and as Policy Director for Children’s Rights. She holds graduate degrees in social work, public health, and law.

Lauren Frey has twenty-five years experience in permanency planning, child welfare system reform, foster care, and adoption. As Project Director of Permanency Services at Casey Family Services, she assists direct practice divisions in implementing permanency practice. She is a national trainer, consultant, and speaker.

Sarah B. Greenblatt has worked throughout her career with and on behalf of vulnerable children, families, and their communities. Since 2001 she has coordinated national technical assistance as the Director of the Casey Center for Effective Child Welfare Practice at Casey Family Services in New Haven, Connecticut. She previously served as Director of the National Resource Center for Foster Care and Permanency Planning at Hunter College.

Robert B. Hill is a senior researcher at Westat, a research firm based in Rockville, Maryland. His current work focuses on the overrepresentation of children of color in the child welfare system and on the well-being of kinship care families. He has a doctorate in sociology from Columbia University.

Benjamin Kerman has been conducting program evaluation and child welfare research at Casey Family Services since 1997. As Director of Research and Evaluation, his current activities focus on foster care, family preservation, and family support. A licensed psychologist, he serves on the adjunct faculty of the Yale Child Study Center.

Elizabeth Lee is Senior Project Analyst, Planning and Learning Technologies, Inc. She has over fifteen years experience conducting policy, cost, and program research and evaluation in a variety of human service fields, including child welfare, Head Start, substance abuse, court reform, and community-based services.

Elissa Madden is currently pursuing a doctoral degree in social work at the University of Texas at Austin. She holds both a bachelor’s and a master’s in social work from Baylor University. Her research interests are primarily in the area of permanence for children in care and the use of mediation in child protection cases.

Anthony N. Maluccio is Professor Emeritus, University of Connecticut, Graduate School of Social Work, and Professor (Retired), Boston College, Graduate School of Social Work. He has been Visiting Professor at Universita’ di Padova and Fondazione Zancan, as well as Melbourne University. His research spans child welfare, including permanency and reunification services.

Penelope L. (Penny) Maza is the Senior Policy Research Analyst in the U.S. Children’s Bureau in the Department of Health and Human Services. She conducts statistical analyses on data from the Adoption and Foster Care Analysis and Reporting System, which informs the development of federal policy in child welfare. She is the author of numerous articles in the child welfare field.

Ruth G. McRoy is a Research Professor and the Ruby Lee Piester Centennial Professor Emerita at the University of Texas at Austin School of Social Work. Interests include family preservation; open, youth, and transracial adoptions; and postadoption services. In collaboration with AdoptUsKids, she leads a team at the University of Texas examining barriers to adoption and factors associated with successful adoptions of children with special needs.

Peter J. Pecora is the Senior Director of Research Services for Casey Family Programs and Professor, School of Social Work, University of Washington, Seattle. He has worked with agencies in the United States and abroad to refine foster care programs, develop evaluation strategies, and implement intensive home-based services, training, and risk assessment systems.

Joan Pennell is Professor and Head, Department of Social Work, North Carolina State University. She is the principal investigator of the North Carolina Family-Centered Meetings Project, which receives funding for work in child welfare from the North Carolina Department of Health and Human Services and work in schools from the North Carolina Department of Public Instruction.

Barbara A. Pine is Professor Emerita at the University of Connecticut where her teaching and research were in three main areas: social work administration, child welfare, and professional ethics. She has consulted and published extensively in child welfare policy, programs, and practice.

Aron Shlonsky is Associate Professor at the University of Toronto and Director of the Bell Canada Child Welfare Research Unit. Before entering academia, he served as a protective services worker, sexual abuse therapist, and substance abuse counselor. Professional interests include actuarial risk assessment in child welfare, kinship foster care, sibling relationships in out-of-home care, subsidized guardianship, and evidence-based practice and evaluation research.

Robin Spath is Assistant Professor and Chair of the Women and Children Substantive Area at the University of Connecticut School of Social Work. She has given presentations and authored and coauthored a number of publications on topics related to child welfare, family violence, and research methodology.

Fred Wulczyn is a research fellow at Chapin Hall Center for Children at the University of Chicago. He is the recipient of the National Association of Public Child Welfare Administrators’ Peter Forsythe Award for leadership in public child welfare. He is director of the Center for State Foster Care and Adoption Data, which focuses on using information technology to bridge the worlds of research and management.