Acknowledgments

This book reflects collaboration and support by many people. My thanks to the contributors for their professional expertise and commitment to serve families affected by the HIV/AIDS epidemic. Their hard work and cooperation enabled this book to be realized. I am very grateful to John Michel at Columbia University Press for his encouragement and good humor, and to Gregory McNamee for copyediting with precision and calmness. I would especially like to thank Bernadette Capelle for her belief in the value of this collection.

The vision for this collection was inspired by my participation in the Coalition on AIDS of Passaic County (CAPCO), New Jersey. Special thanks go to Carol DeGraw, Carol Mevi-Triano, the Rev. Melynn Murphy, Nancy Begin, Shauna Haggar, Elizabeth Paskas, and John McCausland for sharing my belief that older caregivers in the HIV/AIDS epidemic should be made visible and their needs addressed through advocacy, programs, and public policy. Without their support of my research and advocacy, this book would never have been conceived or realized.

My own chapters in this book reflect interviews I conducted with grandparents raising HIV-affected and HIV-orphaned children. My debt to these caregivers is great. By sharing their stories they gave me the gift of being a witness to their lives. I hope that this book will extend my pledge of advocacy on their behalf.

I am especially grateful to friends and colleagues for their consistent and generous support. Nan Bauer-Maglin, Peter Stein, and Donna Perry gave patiently of their time during all phases of this book’s production. Andrea Ades Vasquez and Jerry Markowitz were unfailing in their encouragement and love. Thanks also to Neill Rosenfeld for his calm and helpful responses. Peter Ford’s hospitality was matched by his editing skills. I express special gratitude to Livia McGinnis for her wisdom, strength, and counsel.

I also thank my colleagues in the Department of Community Health at William Paterson University for their humor, patience, and kindness during this book’s production. Thanks to Richard Blonna for advice, Merle Miller for clerical help, and Debra Singer for research assistance. I would like to honor the memory of Grace Galindo, who transcribed several interviews and assisted in Spanish translation, and who died before the book’s completion. I gratefully acknowledge the support received through a grant from the William Paterson University Center for Research.

The devotion of families is at the heart of this book. To my daughters, Emily and Sophia Joslin-Roher, your pride in and appreciation of my work gave me sustenance and joy. Thanks also to Sophie for her organizational assistance and computer savvy. Being a witness to another’s life and her work is a project of love. From cups of tea and healthy meals to endless hours of editing and proofing, my life partner, the Rev. Patricia Ackerman, nourished me in this book’s creation. I am grateful for her friendship and honor her own commitment to social justice. Finally, this book honors the legacies of my parents, Vera Signorelli Joslin, R.N., and Doyle Joslin, M.D., for their dedication to public health and research in the service of healing.
