Many people have been intimately involved in the completion of this project. Thanks to all caregivers and care receivers who have made caregiving a topic of increased importance. I sincerely appreciate the contributors. In order to help others better understand the complexities of caregiving, they shared private caregiving experiences, whether joyful, challenging, or painful. They moved beyond the deep, sometimes painful, reawakened emotions accompanying their descriptions to apply theoretical understanding to their narratives. They graciously accepted tight deadlines and requests for changes. I am particularly grateful to Michelle Bayley, M.S.W., and Anne Jordan, M.S.W., who were phenomenal, supportive, and dedicated research and editorial assistants. Professors Albert Roberts and Gerry Scha-mess gave generous and enlightening comments and guidance on various iterations of the manuscripts. Lauren Dockett, executive editor at Columbia University Press, provided insightful suggestions and continuous understanding and support.

I am especially thankful to family and friends who demonstrated patience, understanding, and support during this project. Most importantly, without the... enduring and generous love, guidance, advice, and support from John Purnell, my husband, through several of my personal challenges, I would not have completed this project. John helped me to better understand and appreciate my dual roles of caregiver and care receiver.
