The entire staff at Columbia University Press has made the process, from idea to final proofs, enjoyable, productive, and timely. We say, “Thank you, one and all.”

In conclusion, we are indebted to all those who have written about, done research on, and examined nonprofit organizations. The field is growing rapidly, and it is likely that new ideas, insights, and good practices will emerge in the coming years. Future editions of this volume will likely show many changes in the principles and practices useful for those entering the field and those emerging as leaders in it. We encourage our readers to share their experiences widely and offer their learning to others. We accept responsibility for the limitations of the current volume and welcome suggestions to improve it.
