Contributors

Silvia Staub Bernasconi has been a professor of social work and human rights at the Zurich School of Social Work (1967–1997) and at the Technical University of Berlin (1997–2003). Since 2002, she has been director of the Master of Social Work (Social Work as Human Rights Profession) in Berlin and is currently vice president of the German Society of Social Work. Dr. Bernasconi has special interests in theory of social problems and social work; social work and human/social rights; poverty, gender, migration, and intercultural conflicts, and racism.

Mary Bricker-Jenkins is a member of the National Staff of the Poor People’s Economic Human Rights Campaign (PPEHRC) and co-convener of the School of Social Work and Social Transformation of the University of the Poor, PPEHRC’s educational arm. She began her career over forty years ago as a New York City welfare worker and has practiced, taught, and published in the areas of child welfare, feminist social work, community organizing, social welfare history, and economic human rights. Recently retired from Temple University, she has returned to her home at WIT’s End Farm in Tennessee, where she continues her work with PPEHRC, teaches part-time at Dalton State College and the University of Tennessee-Chattanooga, and spends as much time as possible on the Tennessee River.
Lena Dominelli is professor of applied social studies and head of Social, Community and Youth Work at the University of Durham in the UK. She is an educator, researcher, and practitioner with many years’ experience and has written widely in the fields of social work. Her most important books are Revitalising Communities in a Globalising World; Social Work: Theory and Practice for a Changing Profession; Women and Community Action (2nd ed.); Anti-Racist Social Work (3rd ed.); Anti-Oppressive Social Work Theory and Practice; and Feminist Social Work Theory and Practice.

Cheri Honkala is the national coordinator and co-founder of the Poor People’s Economic Human Rights Campaign. A formerly homeless mother, she founded the Kensington Welfare Rights Union in 1991 and helped pioneer an economic human rights movement in this country. She has organized massive marches, freedom bus tours, and projects of survival led by the poor themselves. In 2003, Cheri became the national coordinator for the PPEHRC, and she continues speaking, writing, demonstrating, and organizing toward building a nonviolent movement, led by the poor, for economic human rights for all.

Jim Ife has been professor of social work and social policy, and head of the School of Social Work and Social Policy, at the University of Western Australia, and at Curtin University, Perth. He was foundation professor of human rights education and head of the Centre for Human Rights Education at Curtin University until his retirement in 2006. He is a former president of Amnesty International Australia, and former secretary of the Human Rights Commission of the International Federation of Social Workers. His books include Human Rights and Social Work: Towards Rights-Based Practice (Cambridge University Press, 2001).

Rosemary Link is a professor in the Department of Social Work, Augsburg College, Minneapolis, and chair of the board of Southside Family Nurturing Center. Dr. Link has a special interest in children’s rights and family well-being and has published studies in the United States and United Kingdom relating to children, poverty, and the impact of U.S. welfare on people in poverty. As a commissioner for the CSWE Global Commission, she is also participating in developing curriculum and pedagogy that expands global cooperation, increases reciprocal exchange of ideas, and builds in-international partnerships for social workers and educators. This work includes a Department of State grant to develop video Internet classrooms in Slovenia and Singapore.

Robert McCormick is a lawyer who, through his work in family law and other areas of the law, has experienced firsthand the deficiencies in social welfare within this country. He has previously published with Elisabeth Reichert, including articles on human rights of immigrants, role of social workers in criminal prosecution of child sex abuse, and child welfare in the United States and Germany.

James Midgley is Harry and Riva Specht Professor of Public Social Services and former dean of the School of Social Welfare, University of California, Berkeley. He has published widely on social development and international social welfare. His most recent books include Social Policy for Development (with Anthony Hall; Sage Publications, 2004); Lessons from Abroad: Adapting International Social Welfare Innovations (with M. C. Hokenstad; NASW Press, 2004); International Encyclopedia of Social Policy (edited with Tony Fitzpatrick, Huk-ju Kwong, Nick Manning, and Gail Pascall; Routledge, 2006) and International Perspectives on Welfare to Work Policy (edited with Richard Hoefer; Haworth Press, 2006).

Elisabeth Reichert is professor in the School of Social Work at Southern Illinois University at Carbondale. She received her degree in social work from the University of Tennessee with the aid of a Fulbright Scholarship. She also holds an equivalent degree in Germany. She practiced clinical social work until 1994, when she began teaching social work policy and

Katherine van Wormer, M.S.S.W., Ph.D., is professor of social work at the University of Northern Iowa. She has written twelve books in the fields of social work and criminal justice, most recently Human Behavior and the Social Environment, Micro Level, and coauthored HBSE, Macro Level, Women and the Criminal Justice System and Addiction Treatment: A Strengths Perspective, 2nd ed.

Janice Wood Wetzel is a former dean and professor emerita of Social Work at Adelphi University. She is the main United Nations NGO Representative for the International Association of Schools of Social Work and serves as chair of the UN Committee on Mental Health. Dr. Wetzel has published extensively, with a focus on women’s international human rights, advancement, and mental health.

Joseph Wronka is professor of social work, Springfield College, Springfield, MA and principal investigator of The Universal Declaration of Human Rights Project, originating in the Center for Social Change of the Heller School for Social Policy and Management, Brandeis University. He has extensive practice, research, and teaching experience in a variety of settings, such as New York City, Alaska, and Europe. He has published extensively in a variety of scholarly and popular fora, having presented his work in fourteen countries.

Carrie Young is a member of the national staff of the Poor People’s Economic Human Rights Campaign (PPEHRC). She is a social worker and has participated in developing models of social work practice based on economic human rights. Carrie is a member of the Kensington Welfare Rights Union (KWRU) and the School of Social Work and Social Transformation of the University of the Poor, the educational arm of PPEHRC. She is an adjunct faculty member at the School of Social Administration at Temple University and is parenting two young children.