

CONTRIBUTORS

Bernardo Bortolotti is an associate professor of economics at the University of Turin and executive director of Fondazione Eni Enrico Mattei. He received his Ph.D. in economics from the Université Catholique de Louvain. His research interests are in privatization, regulation, and corporate governance. Bortolotti has served as a consultant for the World Bank and as secretary of the Italian Global Advisory Committee on Privatization. He is the founder and scientific coordinator of Privatization Barometer (www.privatizationbarometer.net).

Antonio Estache is a professor at the European Centre for Advanced Research in Economics and Statistics (ECARES) of the Université Libre de Bruxelles. Prior to his position at ECARES, Dr. Estache worked for 25 years at the World Bank, where he advised governments on various types of public sector reforms, including tax reform, infrastructure privatization, and regulation. In addition, he has taught regulation at universities in Africa, Asia, Europe, Latin America, and North America.

Nandini Gupta is an assistant professor of finance at Indiana University's Kelley School of Business. She obtained her doctorate from the University of Pittsburgh. Prior to Indiana University, she was at the William Davidson Institute at the University of Michigan. Her research focuses on reforms that facilitate the development of financial markets, with a particular emphasis on privatization. She has looked at the design of these reforms, the political economy of the decision to adopt them, and their impact on firms and industries. Gupta serves as a consultant to the World Bank, and her work has been published in leading economics and finance journals.

Gupta's work has been published in the Journal of Finance, Journal of Financial Economics, RAND Journal of Economics, and European Economic Review.

Jan Hanousek is Citigroup Professor of Economics at the Center for Economic Research and Graduate Education of Charles University and the Economics Institute of the Academy of Sciences of the Czech Republic (CERGE-EI), whose research interests include applied economics and econometrics, international money and finance, and European integration. He is former director of CERGE-EI, Prague, and he has been a research fellow at the Centre for Economic Policy Research (CEPR), London, the William Davidson Institute, University of Michigan, and affiliated faculty at the Center for Organizational Dynamics, University of Pennsylvania. Prior to joining CERGE-EI, Hanousek received a scholarship at Banach Center, Warsaw, and was a visiting research fellow at Carleton University, Ottawa; the Free University, Amsterdam; Princeton University; and the University of Pennsylvania.

Hanousek's principal fields of specialization are econometrics, applied finance, and development economics. His work covers various theoretical and applied econometric problems in both micro and macro areas. During his professional career, Hanousek has written more than 30 articles and book chapters that have appeared in numerous professional publications.

Jomo Kwame Sundaram is Assistant Secretary General for Economic Development in the United Nations Department of Economic and Social Affairs. Previously he was a professor of applied economics at the University of Malasiya. His other teaching experience includes Harvard University, Yale University, the National University of Malaysia, the Science University of Malaysia, Cambridge University, Cornell University, and the National University of Singapore. Jomo studied at Yale and Harvard, where he received his Ph.D. He has authored over 35 monographs, edited over 50 books, and translated 12 volumes, besides writing many academic papers and articles for the media. He is on the editorial boards of several academic journals and was founder chair of International Development Economics Associates. His books include Privatizing Malaysia: Rents, Rhetoric, Realities (1995).

Evžen Kočenda received a Ph.D. in economics from the University of Houston, following his early education at the Prague School of Economics and the University of Toledo in Ohio. He is currently a professor of economics at CERGE-EI. In addition to his teaching commitments, Kočenda is a member of the editorial board of the Czech Journal of Finance and Economics, a research affiliate of CEPR, and a research fellow of the William Davidson Institute. He has taught widely as a visiting scholar and continues to hold leading and advisory roles on numerous economic and scientific boards and committees.

Valentina Milella is a senior researcher in the Privatization, Regulation and Corporate Governance research program at Fondazione Eni Enrico Mattei in Milan. She is an economics graduate of the University of Turin, Italy. Milella has written several papers on privatization and is currently working as a researcher for the Understanding Privatization Policies Project funded by the European Commission. She is also senior analyst at Privatization Barometer (www.privatizationbarometer.net).

John Nellis is a nonresident senior fellow at the Center for Global Development in Washington, D.C., and principal of the consulting/research firm International Analytics. From 1984 to 2000 he worked at the World Bank, managing privatization assistance to client countries in Eastern Europe, Latin America, and Africa. Before joining the World Bank, Nellis was a university professor in Kenya, Canada, and the United States and an official of the Ford Foundation in North Africa. Recent publications include a volume coedited with Nancy Birdsall, Reality Check: The Distributional Impact of Privatization in Developing Countries (2005); "Privatization: A Summary Assessment" (SAIS Review of International Affairs 27(2), Fall 2007); and "Leaps of Faith: Launching the Privatization Process in Transition" in Privatization in Transition Economies (forthcoming in 2008).

Gérard Roland joined the faculty at the University of California, Berkeley, in 2001. He received his Ph.D. from Université Libre de Bruxelles in 1988 and taught there from 1988 to 2001. Roland is also a CEPR research fellow, where he was program director between 1995 and 2006. He serves as editor of the Journal of Comparative Economics and was an associate editor of several other journals.

Roland has been one of the leading researchers in the field of transition economics and wrote the only existing graduate textbook on the subject. He has made important and widely cited contributions not only on privatization but also on the political economy of transition, enterprise restructuring, financial reform, and the macroeconomics of transition. Roland has also made important contributions in political economy. His contributions span from the optimal speed and sequencing of reforms to the breakup of nations and federalism to the separation of powers in democracies and comparative analysis of parliamentary and presidential systems.

Among Roland's awards and honors are recipient of the Medal of the University of Helsinki, Officier de l'Ordre de Leopold II, and entries in Who's Who in the World, Who's Who in America, and Who's Who in Economics since 1776. He was a fellow at the Center for Advanced Studies in Behavioral Sciences in Stanford during 1998–1999. He was program chair of the Fifth Nobel Symposium in Economics devoted to the economics of transition in 1999. He was named Jean Monnet Professor at Université Libre de Bruxelles in 2001 and received an honorary professorship at Renmin University of China in 2002.

Joseph E. Stiglitz is University Professor at Columbia University, copresident of the Initiative for Policy Dialogue, and chair of Columbia's Committee on Global Thought. He holds a part-time appointment at the Brooks World Poverty Institute of the University of Manchester, England. In 2001 he was awarded the Nobel Prize in economics for his analysis of the role of information asymmetry in market failure. He served as chair of the Council of Economic Advisers during the Clinton administration and then as Chief Economist and Senior Vice-President of the World Bank from 1997 to 2000. His most recent book, Globalization and Its Discontents (2001), is an international bestseller translated into 28 languages.

Jan Svejnar is the Everett E. Berg Professor of Business Administration, director of the International Policy Center, and a professor of economics and public policy at the University of Michigan. His areas of interest include economic development and transition, labor economics, and behavior of the firm. Svejnar's research focuses on the determinants and effects of government policies on firms and labor and capital markets, corporate and national governance and performance, and entrepreneurship. He has published widely and serves as an adviser to governments and firms in advanced and emerging market economies.

Lourdes Trujillo is a professor at the University of Las Palmas de Gran Canaria, where she teaches microeconomics. She has served as an adviser on infrastructure reform to various Spanish authorities and Latin American governments as well as to global agencies, including the European Union, the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development, and the World Bank.

