

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

We are deeply grateful to our baccalaureate, master's, and doctoral students—and to administrators and practitioners whom we met in the course of our teaching and consultation work—for their generosity in permitting us to use their practice excerpts. We especially appreciate the remarkable richness and relevance of their materials to the social issues facing our society and to the struggles of our profession to meet increasingly complex human needs. We are indebted to faculty colleagues throughout Canada and the United States who have influenced our work in many ways. Alex thanks Professor Nancy Humphreys for her generous sharing of macro teaching notes and other materials as well as for providing feedback on a number of chapters prepared for this edition. Alex also thanks faculty colleagues Diane Drachman, Carolyn Knight, Jacqueline Mondros, and Lawrence Shulman for their helpful suggestions on various chapters as well as for their friendship and support over many years.

Alex is also indebted to his late, beloved, faculty colleagues and friends George Brager, Richard Cloward, Mary Funnyé Goldson, Charles Grosser, Irving Miller, William Schwartz, and Hyman J. Weiner for their remarkable contributions to social work theory and practice. Their ideas continue to influence the profession and Alex's own work.

Carel would have thanked and Alex thanks our colleagues Ann Hartman, Steven Holloway, Joan Laird, Judith A. B. Lee, and Renee Solomon for sharing their creativity and practice acumen with us over the years.

We also express our appreciation to Jan Lambert, University of Connecticut School of Social Work librarian, for lending us her professional competence as well as for her graciousness and generosity.

Finally, we are grateful to our families for their love and support. Alex is grateful for the professional contributions of his wife, Naomi, as well as for her abiding love and support and that of their children, Daniel and Sharon; daughter-in-law, Amy; and grandchildren, Max and Claire. In their distinctive ways, Alex's late mother, stepfather, and father, Fay, Pincus, and Aaron; his aunt, Maria; and his late mother-in-law, Ilse, taught him the meaning of courage and the value of life. Carel was always grateful for the love and devotion of her husband, William, and daughters, Adrienne and Denise. She was also extremely proud of her daughters' significant professional accomplishments and, most of all, of their humanity.

THE LIFE MODEL OF SOCIAL WORK PRACTICE
