:: This book could not have been completed without the generosity and encouraging assistance offered by many people, whose contributions we thankfully acknowledge. We extend both admiration and gratitude to our clients, who taught us much about courage and perseverance while transforming their difficult legacies of childhood trauma into new directions in their lives. We have appreciated the collegial support of many individuals at the Smith College School for Social Work. Our writing and research efforts have been financially supported by the Brown Foundation and the Clinical Research Institute of Smith College. We thank our dean, Carolyn Jacobs, for interesting and thought-provoking dialogues that helped shape our ideas. Gerry Schamess has taught us a great deal about clinical practice and editing, skills that we have valued highly while working on this project.

We are especially indebted to our dear friend and colleague, Joan Berzoff, who spent considerable time and energy reading and rereading drafts of the manuscript. Joan is an exemplary role model in many ways: clinical writer, theorist, and teacher. We admire her productivity and her sharp wit. We also thank our resident and adjunct faculty colleagues at Smith College, who have consistently shown interest in and encouragement of this project. In particular, we thank Margery Daniel, Bill Etnyre, and Ziva Levite, who provided astute feedback on various chapters. We are indebted to our administrative support staff at the Smith College School for Social Work and thankful for their consistent professionalism.

We are especially grateful to AnnaMarie Russo, who edited and formatted the manuscript. We deeply appreciate her writing and editing acumen, her sense of balance, and her remarkable attention to detail. Her work so often went “above and beyond” her regular assignments. Last, we are indebted to our students, who have asked questions, provided critiques, and engaged us in thought-provoking dialogues. We thank our two research assistants, Julie Jacobs and Jen Babis, for their many hours of library assistance.

We thank E. Cherpanov, Ph.D., and H. Bui, M.S.W., of the Springfield, Massachusetts, Refugee and Immigrant Program (Child and Family Service of the Pioneer Valley, Inc.), who shared their clinical experiences with refugee and immigrant populations. In addition, we acknowledge email correspondence (February 2003) from our colleagues W. Gorman, Ph.D. (University of Illinois at Chicago) and I. Kira (Access Community Health and Research Center, Dearborn, Michigan), who offered insights about contemporary practice models with immigrant populations. These contributions are found in Chapter 14.

We also thank John Michel, our editor at Columbia University Press, and Ms. Jeanie Lu, editorial assistant, who ably moved us through the various stages of this project.

KATHRYN KARUSAITIS BASHAM AND DENNIS MIEHLS

: : I owe a special debt of gratitude to my parents, Dr. Vincent and Vera Karusaitis, who by the nature of their example, taught me appreciation for rigorously committing their lives to work with others. I have dedicated this book to my esteemed colleague, Dr. Norma Steuerle, who worked with me as a valued colleague/clinical psychologist, friend, and partner in clinical practice for eighteen years. Her sharp clinical acumen, unwavering optimism, and integrity of character have always guided my practice, and they continue to do so even after her tragic death in the September 11, 2001, terrorist attacks. Her presence, as a friend and professional colleague, is missed deeply yet reflected in the lives of those fortunate to have known her.

I extend gratitude to my family and friends. In particular, I thank my sister, Ann Karus Meeropol, and my brother-in-law, Michael Meeropol, for their steadfast, compassionate support of my writing ventures; my niece Ivy, for excelling in her creative and original filmmaking; and my nephew, Greg, whose adventuresome spirit and dedication to work with high-risk adolescents serve as inspiration. To my dear friends, Andrea and Norma, I thank you for the depth of our shared friendship. Many thanks to Beth Miehl for her steadfast encouragement and friendship. I extend many thanks to my dear friends Rebecca and Jorge Pulles, who have provided anchoring encouragement and constructive “nudging” to complete the project. I extend my gratitude to my long-term friend, Sheila Wolfe, for her keen sense of humor and generous support.

Throughout the years I have been fortunate to work with a number of exceptional clinical supervisors, consultants, and colleagues. I thank Dr. Sheila Gray, Dr. Joyce Everett, Dr. Susan Donner, Dr. Phebe Sessions, Ms. Dorothy Miller, Ms. Audrey Walker, Ms. Brenda Twyner Robinson, Ms. Khalilah Karim-Rushdan, Ms. Liz Carole Walton, Dr. Kathleen Mosby, Dr. Fred Wamboldt, Dr. John Zinner, and Dr. Peter Steinglass, who have provided invaluable contributions to my professional development. I also extend my gratitude to the members of the Georgia, Washington, and South Carolina chapters of the National Federation of Clinical Social Workers and the staff of Jewish Family and Career Services in Atlanta, Georgia, who have provided useful feedback and generous support to my workshop presentations of the couple therapy practice model. Last, I thank my coauthor, Dennis Miehls, for demonstrating skillfully the art of cooperation and collaboration. I have admired and appreciated the depth of Dennis's clinical acumen, his exceptional discipline, and his impressive dedication to excellence in clinical social work practice, education, and writing. I also appreciate the fact that we were still able to laugh together while completing this difficult project. Thank you for the positive transformative changes that I have experienced in the course of coauthoring this text.

: : I thank a number of others who have helped shape my personal, professional, and academic identities. I am indebted to Beth, who so often "carried" our household when I was immersed in this project. I am also indebted to James, who, as a ready and competent computer technician, saved me much time and frustration. Beth and James offered support in countless ways that facilitated our completion of this project. I will be always thankful for their presence in my life. I thank my parents, who helped me internalize the attitudes that value both hard work and relaxation. I thank Hugh and Janet Stevenson, my dear friends, whose experience and encouragement helped to shape my academic career. I thank Dr. Ken Moffatt for his collegiality and the opportunity to work and write together. I am grateful to Ken for having introduced me to postmodern writers.

I have also had the good fortune of working with many astute clinicians and supervisors during my professional practice career. I thank Drs. J.

Casselman, E. Hanna, D. Kligman, J. Lohrenz, and G. Truant, who all helped to shape my professional self. Many other colleagues at London Health Sciences Center, King's College, and Wilfrid Laurier University have also challenged me to be a clear thinker, supervisor, and teacher. Last, I thank my coauthor, Kathryn Basham, who has artfully encouraged me to strive for the highest standards in our work. I am grateful for Kathryn's intellectual giftedness, her clinical wisdom, her humor, her perseverance, and her ongoing collegiality and friendship.
