Serving as the editor of a book collection, particularly one as lengthy as Twenty-first-Century Motherhood, was a daunting and yet deeply rewarding experience; one that for me may be likened to arranging—and surviving—your child’s birthday party celebrated by a houseful of sugar-crazed four-year-olds: a great deal of planning, hectic hours of supervision (or at least an attempt at such), and much clean up are guaranteed. But, as with my children’s many birthday parties, I was fortunate to have many other mothers assist me in this task. I am deeply indebted to Lauren Dockett, Avni Majithia, Marisa Lora Pagano, Kerri Cox Sullivan, Anne McCoy, and Michael Simon at Columbia University Press; they directed, arranged, and tidied better than the most accomplished event organizer. All editors should be so fortunate. A big thank you to my research assistants, Sarah Trimble, Melissa Nurse, and Sara Malik, who skillfully and patiently took care of all the details and kept me sane throughout it all. A particular thank you is due to Randy Chase, my proofreader and indexer: no one can restore order to chaos better than Randy. I could not have completed this work without him. My deepest appreciation goes to the Social Science Research Council of Canada and its continued support of my research through various grants, most notably the Standard Research Grant and the International Opportunities Fund grant. Thank you to the members of the Association for Research on Mothering—my extended family who makes everything I do possible. Special thanks to Renée

Knapp at ARM, who makes me laugh when I want to cry. And to my “sisters,” Lisa Brouckxon, Angela Bosco, Linn Baran, Christina Cudahy, Janice Giles, Frances Latchford, Jennifer O’Reilly, Adrienne Ryder, and May Friedman, thank you for the joy you bring to my life. My deepest gratitude goes to my children, Jesse, Erin, and Casey O’Reilly-Conlin, who love and support me despite the craziness of my writing life, and to my partner of twenty-eight years, Terry Conlin, who makes this writing life possible. Finally, thank you to the contributors of this volume, who made this task less daunting than it could have been and far more rewarding than I imagined it would be.
