Preparing this book has been an important capstone to the Northern Manhattan Community Voices Collaborative. We did not believe we could just close the door on the initiative and leave unsaid the many challenges and accomplishments of all of the wonderful people who in one way or another worked in the collaborative over a ten-year period. When we started to outline the book and begin the process it seemed overwhelming. In reflecting back over the process of writing the book, we first have to acknowledge the efforts of two key collaborators, Nancy Bruning and Yisel Alonzo. Nancy, an experienced editor and author, came aboard to help us organize the effort and to work with all of the chapter authors in editing their drafts. She kept the process moving along and prevented us from bogging down. Yisel prepared all of the Northern Manhattan Community Voices Collaborative files so that information was retrievable. The enthusiasm of Nancy and Yisel made the job of preparing the book much easier for us!

We thank the W. K. Kellogg Foundation for having the confidence in us to award us the first grant of $4.5 million and the follow-up grant of $1 million to complement our efforts with policy work. We acknowledge with great appreciation Barbara Sabol, the Kellogg program officer who oversaw the Community Voices initiative. Henrie Treadwell was the Kellogg project director for the initiative, and her guiding light moved us to dedicate this book to her.

We also acknowledge her help in gaining a Kellogg Foundation grant for $1 million for start-up funds for the Adair Center when funding for charitable efforts dried up for projects in New York City as it was directed toward the aftermath of 9/11. The Community Voices national program office under Henrie Treadwell's leadership provided much technical assistance for all of the thirteen participating sites through national meetings, individual meetings with each site, and evaluations of our progress. We were fortunate to also have the assistance of Marguerite Ro, one of the Kellogg Foundation consultants for the Community Voices initiative who was also a faculty member at Columbia. Her advice was always solid and helped us during the years of the project. We thank Gail Christopher at the foundation who, in her role as vice president for health, wrote the foreword for the book.

We also acknowledge other funders who provided direct support for the initiatives described in the book. The American Legacy Foundation joined the Community Voices initiative, and we thank the foundation for the $800,000 grant to carry out the Tobacco initiative described in chapter 6. New York State provided funds to Alianza Dominicana for the facilitated enrollment work cited in chapter 3. The Primary Care Development Corporation and its executive director Ronda Kotelchuck are acknowledged for a $400,000 grant for the Thelma Adair Center, and the Empire State Development Corporation is acknowledged for providing $2 million in construction funds for the Center (chapter 13). Columbia University College of Physicians and Surgeons and the College of Dental Medicine are recognized for sustaining the Adair Center financially during the first seven years of its existence and for the work it has accomplished in transferring the facility to a Federally Qualified Health Center, the Ryan Center. The Health Resources Services Administration provided the funding for the SASA project (chapter 7), and the Greater New York Hospital Association provided a grant for the work that the Northern Manhattan Community Voices Collaborative did on the HITE program (chapter 8). The Community DentCare Network has attracted many funders. A $1 million grant from the W. K. Kellogg Foundation enabled establishment of the network; a grant of $1 million from the New York State Department of Health allowed expansion of a treatment site at I.S. 164 and the purchase of a new van; and a $150,000 grant from the Paula Vial Lampert Foundation provided funding for the original mobile van program. The College of Dental Medicine was grateful to the Alex Rodriguez Foundation's support of $250,000 for a new van to replace the original van, which wore out from use. The asthma and immunization initiatives received additional grants from the Center for Disease Control and Prevention, the New York State Department of Health, Bank of America, and the Merck Foundation.

We were both surprised and delighted with the willingness of the chapter authors to step up to the plate and prepare their stories. We are deeply grateful to the authors and coauthors who took the time from their extremely busy schedules to write their stories. They are: David Albert, Yisel Alonzo, Mario Drummonds, Sally E. Findley, Laura Frye, Sandra Harris, Matilde Irigoyen, Kathleen Klink, Harris K. (Ken) Lampert, Anita Lee, María Lizardo, Stephen Marshall, Rosa Madera-Reese, Jacqueline Martínez, James McIntosh, Miriam Mejía, Dennis Mitchell, Benjamin Ortiz, Martin Ovalles, Moisés Pérez, Cheryl Ragonesi, Daniel F. Seidman, Martha Sánchez, Susan Sturm, and Gloria Thomas. We recognize the contributions of Walid Michelen in helping us prepare this book. His interview and written account helped form the context for various chapters. While he served as vice president for community affairs at the New York Presbyterian Hospital and co-chair of the Health Promotion/Disease Prevention Working Group, he was always a champion for the Northern Manhattan Community Voices Collaborative. Dr. Edward Heaton, another champion of the NMCVC, often smoothed our pathway in his then role as Columbia's Associate Dean for the Harlem Hospital affiliation. We are grateful to Jennifer Stark for her superb research and editorial assistance on the final chapter of the book and to Shirley Torho for reference work.

We would be remiss if we did not acknowledge the vitality of the northern Manhattan community and its leadership who helped nurture the Northern Manhattan Community Voices Collaborative. Several of the community leaders are authors or coauthors of chapters and they are acknowledged above. In addition, many individuals are highlighted in the various stories in the book. We express our deepest respect, admiration, and gratitude for their contributions. Without them, these past ten years would not have been possible and we would not have had this story to tell. Of all of our community collaborators, Thelma C. Davidson Adair deserves special mention. She has been a guiding light for us in the Harlem community and was always available to lend a helping hand whenever we hit roadblocks.

Finally, a special acknowledgment to Shelley Lopez, who assisted the writing team in so many ways by taking care of details (including the food!) that made our meetings to prepare the book productive and eased our communications with the various partners.
