

Acknowledgments

I am tremendously thankful to many individuals for helping this book see the light of day. For the production of the book I am sincerely grateful to Lauren Dockett, the past editor at Columbia University Press, for seeing the potential in my original book proposal and providing me the support to produce this work. I thank Roy Thomas, the senior manuscript editor, for continuing this momentum and Anita O'Brien for making the writing shine. The initial and secondary reviews from two scholars were extremely helpful. I am grateful to the Racial Democracy, Crime and Justice–Network for allowing me opportunities in 2007 and 2011 to work on the ideas and material for this book, as well as for the mentorship, encouragement, and peer reviews from Ruth Peterson, Lauren Krivo, Steven Lopez, James Diego Vigil, Scott Decker, and Avelardo Valdez.

Thanks go to individuals at New Mexico State University (NMSU), including Cynthia Bejarano for encouraging me to express my voice; my best homie Carlos Posadas for his constant friendship and support along with the initial idea to submit my book proposal to Columbia University Press; and Tom Winfree for supporting me and providing excellent discussions regarding the gang literature. Thanks also to the participants at NMSU's Teaching Academy Publish and Flourish workshop for providing additional attention and peer review feedback to help improve the writing process. Much love to NMSU and my colleagues in the Department of Criminal Justice for providing me a home after the completion of my dissertation. Moreover much appreciation to my friends and colleagues of the newly emerging Latino/a criminologists: Alice Cepeda, Vera Lopez, Cid Martinez, Ramiro Martinez, Wilson Palacios, Anthony Peguero, Edwardo Portillos, John Rodriguez, Nancy Rodriguez, Victor Rios, Xuan Santos, Mike Tapia, Martin Urbina, and María Vélez. Thanks to those who paved the way: Alfredo Mirandé, Joan Moore, Felix Padilla, Luis Rodriguez, Martín Sánchez-Jankowski, and James Diego Vigil.

Although Gang Life in Two Cities is an original manuscript, my analysis has benefited from peer reviews received from prior publications. A section of chapter 2 appeared in Journal of Contemporary Ethnography 38(2):143–68 and Social Justice: A Journal of Crime, Conflict and World Order 36(1):82–101. A section of chapter 3 originally appeared in Enduring Legacies: Ethnic Histories and Cultures of Colorado, edited by Arturo Aldama, Reiland Rabaka, Daryl Maeda, and Elisa Facio for the University Press of Colorado. A section of chapter 5 originally appeared in Latino Studies 8(3):373–98. Several sections of my article in Aztlán: A Journal of Chicano Studies 34(2):99–134 are included in the introduction and in chapters 6, 7, and 8. Each of these publications received guidance and feedback from editors and reviewers who strengthened my arguments. I received funding support during my doctoral study at the University of Colorado from the Society for the Study of Social Problems' Racial/Ethnic Minority Graduate Scholarship, Becker Fellowship, Hispanic Scholarship Fund, and Beverly Sears Grant. The money received from these sources enabled me to successfully complete the dissertation. The College of Arts and Sciences Stan Fulton Endowed Chair contributed proceeds toward the completion of this book.

I truly appreciate my faculty mentors in the Department of Sociology at Weber State University, who inspired me with the passion to become a sociologist. During graduate school Patti Adler trained me in ethnography. She pushed me to get into my settings, develop an analytical framework, and improve my writing. Patti mentored me on how to complete graduate school, become a better teacher, and develop a trajectory to help prepare for promotion and tenure at NMSU. I also thank Arturo Aldama, Joanne Belknap, and Joan Moore for their continuous encouragement in developing my dissertation and providing mentorship after I left Colorado.

Although the production and research mentorship helped me to craft this book, such a project requires my utmost appreciation for the barrio and its inspiring residents. It was in the barrio where homeboys and homegirls, activists, cops, lawyers, teachers, and members of the community allowed me access to their lives to learn more about gangs. I hope this work captures your voices and provides an avenue for much needed solutions in the post–civil rights era. I use pseudonyms for most of the individuals and groups I interviewed. The names of gangs and events are maintained for historical specificity unless it reduces the anonymity of an individual; in these cases the gang name is omitted. To my key partners, you are deeply appreciated in my life and in the creation of this book. One of my key partners gave me permission to thank him directly: Ernesto Vigil. Ernesto was my mentor who transformed my consciousness about gangs by emphasizing the importance of history and the role of the Crusade for Justice in changing the city of Denver.

My family deserves the most gratitude as they went through the good and bad times in my life. They provided me with the drive and encouragement to push myself beyond the limits to be a better person. I thank Charlene Shroulote and our four children—Jazmine, Doroteo, Jocelyn, and Justice—for loving me. Moreover, Charlene has supported my life and its various transitions since I was 16 and definitely deserves my utmost thanks for everything that she has helped me accomplish. Her constructive criticism has helped develop many of the points made in this book and throughout my life. My life has also benefited from the tremendous support and love from the Durán family—my parents, brothers, sisters, aunts, uncles, nephews, nieces, and entire extended family—and from my second family—Mary Jane, Otis Sr., Johnny, Francine, Otis Jr., and their extended family. Finally, I could never have completed such a project without acknowledging and appreciating all the prayers and support given to me from my mom, dad, Father Pat, and the Abbey of Our Lady of the Holy Trinity.

GANG LIFE IN TWO CITIES

