

CONTRIBUTORS

José Antonio Alonso is director of the Complutense Institute for International Studies and professor of applied economics at the Universidad Complutense of Madrid. He is a member of the Committee for Development Policy at the United Nations Economic and Social Council, and his main research areas focus on growth and the external sector, trade specialization and company internationalization, and development aid policies. He is the editor of Principios: Estudios de Economía Política. His most recent books are Acción Colectiva y Desarrollo: El Papel de las Instituciones, coauthored with Carlos Garcimartín, and Corrupción, Cohesión Social y Desarrollo, coedited with Carlos Mulas-Granados.

Owen Barder is a Visiting Fellow at the Center for Global Development. He is an economist and director of aidinfo at Development Initiatives, a program that aims to make information about aid more accessible. Before working on international development, he was the Economic Affairs private secretary to the British prime minister. He has also worked in the Treasury of the government of South Africa and began his career as an economist at the UK Treasury, where, among other roles, he served as private secretary to two chancellors of the Exchequer.

Carlos Garcimartín is professor of economics at Universidad Rey Juan Carlos, Madrid, Spain, and researcher at the Complutense Institute for International Studies. He has been affiliated with the Universities of Salamanca, Complutense de Madrid, and Rey Juan Carlos. He was researcher at the Istituto Affari Internazionali in Rome. His main research topics include public economics, international economics, and development economics. He has been involved in national and international research projects and has published articles in prestigious international journals.

Mikaela Gavas specializes in European Union (EU) development cooperation. She has worked in the EU institutions—Commission and Parliament—as well as for an EU Member State, the UK's Department for International Development, where she led the drafting of the department's EU Institutional Strategy Paper and analysis of the implications of the Lisbon Treaty for EU development cooperation. She managed BOND's (UK NGO network) EU program from 2002 to 2006 and chaired CONCORD's (European Confederation of NGOs) Policy Forum.

Stephany Griffith-Jones is financial markets director at the Initiative for Policy Dialogue at Columbia University and was Professorial Fellow at the Institute of Development Studies. She is a member of the Warwick Commission on Financial Regulation. Her research interests include global capital flows, with special reference to flows to emerging markets; macro-economic management of capital flows in Latin America, Eastern Europe, and sub-Saharan Africa; proposals for international measures to diminish volatility of capital flows and reduce the likelihood of currency crises; analysis of national and international capital markets; and proposals for international financial reform. She has published widely on the international financial system and its reform.

Deborah Johnson is a research officer at the Overseas Development Institute (ODI), focusing primarily on a major CAPE initiative, the European Development Cooperation Support Programme. She joined ODI after eight years as a management consultant in the private sector. She previously worked for an NGO in southern India and as a research assistant in the European Parliament. She has an MA in modern and medieval languages from the University of Cambridge and an MSc in development studies from the University of London (SOAS).

Víctor Martín is an adjunct professor in the Department of Applied Economics at the Universidad Rey Juan Carlos. He has been a researcher in the Department on International Economic Analysis of Complutense Institute for International Studies since 2001 and at the Center for Studies “Economía de Madrid” at the Universidad Rey Juan Carlos. He has a PhD in economics from the Universidad Rey Juan Carlos.

Simon Maxwell was the former director of the Overseas Development Institute. He is an economist who worked overseas for ten years, in Kenya and India for the United Nations Development Programme and in Bolivia for UKODA, and then for sixteen years at the Institute of Development Studies at the University of Sussex, latterly as programme manager for Poverty, Food Security, and the Environment. He has written widely on poverty, food security, agricultural development, and aid. His current research interests include development policy, aid, poverty, food security, linking relief and development, global governance, and bridging research and policy.

Andrew Mold joined the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development Development Centre in February 2008, having previously worked for the United Nations in Ethiopia, Chile, and Costa Rica. From 2000 to 2004 he was the codirector of a master’s program in development studies at the Complutense Institute for International Studies and was also the vice secretary general of the International University of Menéndez Pelayo. Since 2003 he has been an editor of the European Journal of Development Research. He has a master’s degree from Cambridge University and a PhD in economics from the Complutense University Madrid.

Akbar Noman is an economist with a wide range of experience in policy analysis and formulation in a variety of developing and transition economies, having worked extensively for the World Bank as well as other international organizations and at senior levels of government. He combines teaching at Columbia University’s School of International and Public Affairs with being a Senior Fellow at the Initiative for Policy Dialogue, where his tasks continue to include policy work with governments. His other academic appointments have been at Oxford University (where he was also a student) and the Institute of Development Studies at the University of Sussex.

José Antonio Ocampo is professor in the School of International and Public Affairs and fellow of the Committee on Global Thought at Columbia University. He has been a member of the United Nations Commission of Experts on Reforms of the International Monetary and Financial System and has served as undersecretary-general of the United Nations for Economic and Social Affairs, executive secretary of the United Nations Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean, and minister of Finance, Agriculture, and Planning for Colombia. His most recent books are Handbook of Latin American Economics, coedited with Jaime Ros, and Time for a Visible Hand: Lessons from the 2008 World Financial Crisis, coedited with Stephany Griffith-Jones and Joseph E. Stiglitz.

Ariane Ortiz holds a master of public administration degree from Columbia University's School of International and Public Affairs and has worked at the Initiative for Policy Dialogue. She previously worked for Citigroup's Corporate and Investment Bank in Monterrey, Mexico.

Fernando Prada is associate researcher at the National/International Forum of Peru. He has carried out research projects at the University of Sussex and has published, along with Francisco Sagasti and Keith Bezanson, studies on financing development.

Annalisa Prizzon is a Research Officer at the Overseas Development Institute working particularly on development finance issues. She has been an economist at the OECD Development Centre and a consultant with the World Bank. She holds a PhD in Economics and Public Finance from the University of Pavia (Italy) with a focus on external debt sustainability in low-income countries.

Francisco Sagasti chairs the board of the Science and Technology Program (FINCyT) at the Office of the Prime Minister in Peru, is a member of the board of governors of the Canadian International Development Research Centre, a member of the international advisory board of the Lemelson Foundation, and advisor to private corporations, international organizations, foundations, and public-sector agencies. He is director emeritus of FORO Nacional/Internacional, a civil society independent organization created to promote democratic governance and to foster dialogue and consensus on critical development issues.

Judith Tyson is a PhD candidate at the School of African and Oriental Studies at the University of London. Her thesis focuses on the systemic risks of expanding financial access in developing countries, including through microfinance and the impact of financialization. She has worked as an investment banker, specializing in risk management and financial control.

Juliana Vallejo is an economist from Universidad de los Andes (Bogotá, Colombia) and completed her master in business administration degree at the Instituto Tecnológico de Estudios Superiores de Monterrey, Mexico. She has worked for Columbia University's Initiative for Policy Dialogue.

