I THANK MY MANY MBA and Executive students who put so much of themselves into the “personal strategy” part of the course that I teach at Columbia Business School. I and this book have benefited greatly from their work and thought. Some of their work appears in these pages. I offer special thanks to Hana Reznikov, an MBA graduate who pushed me to write up that part of the course so that she and others have something to pass on to their friends and relatives who might find it useful too. This book is the result.

And I owe a debt to the publisher, Myles Thompson, whose unfailing and creative support has served as inspiration for me for many years now. And then there is the editor, Bridget Flannery-McCoy. As you might guess from our names, she and I are both of Irish stock. So please forgive my blasphemy, but if you saw this manuscript before and after she got her hands on it, you would know that I do not exaggerate when I say: St. Bridget performed another miracle.
